MINING LOCATIONS.

The debate in the house of representatives on Wednesday and the views expressed by members of the assembly in conversation upon the bill to amend the law relating to the location and recording of mining claims indicates a misapprehension upon the part of some of the members at least as to the effect of the provision, which (as amended) requires locators to sink a shaft six feet in depth within sixty days from the time of location. The fact is the expense of sinking the shaft to the required depth applies upon the whole amount—$500—which the United States statutes require shall have been expended before a patent can be obtained. It is well known that hundreds of mining locations in this territory are irregularly made and have no actual value; that no work is done upon them during the time allowed for the first year's representation work, and that at the expiration of that time the claims are released under other names in the interest of the original locators, without any real development work being done upon them. The result has been that the practical development of mineral claims has been retarded for speculative purposes to the injury of bona fide miners and the territory at large. The holding of locations upon which no effort is made to develop whatever of mineral wealth may be contained in them is clearly against the intent of the United States law. The proposed territorial statute is designed to prevent the practice complained of, and adds nothing to the requirements of the federal law, except to make it obligatory upon locators to perform some development work in order to establish the validity of their claim. The bill is one which merits well at the hands of the legislative assembly.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION. The appointment of the territory under the act of congress for the admission of Montana into the union is given in another part of this paper, in the proclamation of the governor declaring the action of the officials empowered by that act to perform the duty. A careful examination of the work will show that it has been performed in a liberal spirit and with all due regard to the rights of both political parties. From each of the twenty-five districts thus created, twelve delegates are to be chosen, each elector being allowed two votes for delegates, of which he may give one to each of two candidates, or he may give both his votes to one person for delegate to the constitutional convention, by which means the minority in each district is sure to have one of the three delegates to be elected. This plan of choosing a representative body is the fairest one that could be devised and will tend to elevate the standard of intelligence in the convention, because the natural result will be that the minority in each district will select as their representative some man of marked ability, whose power will be felt in the convention; and this is a matter in which democrats should be especially vigilant. The apportionment for the convention will naturally draw public attention towards the selection of delegates, and have in that way the effect to secure judicious action on the part of the electors. The convention which is to lay the foundation for the state government should be composed of the best men, actuated by patriotic motives.

The Knights of Labor organization in New England is undergoing a crisis in its existence, owing to the secession of the shoemakers' assemblies, which have for some years constituted a very considerable proportion of the membership of the order. It is claimed by the shoemakers that, while they have not been able to obtain what they consider their rights through affiliation with other trades under the plan of the Knights of Labor any more than they were when organized into an independent union, they have been called upon to contribute for the assistance of strikers in other departments of labor. Accordingly a national union of shoemakers has been formed, and the operatives are withdrawing from the Knights of Labor assemblies to unite with the local unions. The experience of one class of mechanics in this respect is very likely to be that of others, and it is within the bounds of possibility that the action of the New England shoemakers portends the dissolution of the Knights of Labor.

THE POORMAN MINE.

Work Resumed in the Concentrator—About the Sale of the Mine.

Patrick Clark, superintendent of the Poorman mine at Burke, Idaho, was in the city yesterday on his way back to the Cour d'Alene. He has been over to Butte for a few days on business connected with the company. He says that the concentrator has been started to work again, the lake now being clear for navigation; a heavy shipment of concentrates was made last week. The shaft which was started some time ago, in the creek just below the tunnel, Mr. Clark says is still being put down. It is now 120 feet deep, but sinking will not stop until the 300 foot point is reached. In the meantime levels are being run at different points of the shaft. The work is being looked better than ever. Ore is being extracted from only one of the tunnels, out of which enough is taken daily to keep the big concentrator busy.

Relative to the reported sale of the mine to an eastern syndicate Mr. Clark said: "Well, the mine is still for sale if those people are willing to give us our price. The Poorman will not go a begging. The syndicate which has been negotiating for it will buy after that date their option expires." Mr. Clark speaks most enthusiastically of the Cour d'Alene mineral district. A number of new concentrators are going up, one of which A. M. Eiler, of Helena, is erecting on the San Francisco mine. Inter Mountain, Pete Brown, one of the oldest prospectors in Montana, arrived in town yesterday with several sacks of free gold quartz, discovered near the Home mine, on Lyon gulch, one-quarter of a mile south of the Gold Flint mill and mine. His partners, Messrs. Robert Cramer and David Black, discovered the lead last fall, and it had been recorded on the 1st of January, 1888. The find justified them in a thorough prospect. They hammered through fifteen feet of boulders and slide, roots of trees and frozen ground until they struck bedrock. The shaft is eight feet four inches by three feet six inches in the clear, and on the line of the lead, which was but twelve inches in width with a six-foot vein of porphyry on the side. The pay streak now assumes proportions of eighteen inches in the clear and is gradually widening. The assays show $60 in gold and $10 in silver, with plenty of oxide of iron. The last assay shows $70 in gold and still less in silver. The mine is being worked and Mr. Brown has panned enough gold out of the quartz with a hand mortar to give the company a stake for some time.

"Penny Foolish." and Pound Wise. How many people purchasing an article take the cheapest, the putter and so because it does not last. If it is a clothes wringer it breaks the back of the poor woman who has to use it. The Empire Wringer, made at Auburn, N. Y., by a new arrangement, does not have the crank attached to either roll, and the purchaser saves more than half the labor and it wears two ordinary wringers.
